Looking every bit the queen her American cousins had been hoping to see, Britain's Elizabeth II put on her pearl-and-diamond tiara and matching jewels tonight to reign at a dinner given for her by President Reagan.

"I knew before we came that we had exported many of our traditions to the United States," the queen told a glittering black-tie crowd in a toast after dinner. "I had not realized before that weather was one of them."

Tower of London, Big Ben, Buckingham Palace and photographs of the royal family. Of that part of the program the prince told Steve Silver, producer of "Beach Blanket Babylon, "If that thing had fallen off, it would have been an international incident."

Before tonight's dinner, the queen's official taster checked out the five-course meal of lobster terrine with golden caviar, consomme of pheasant, quenelles of goose liver, loin of veal with morel and with balsam sauce and a dessert called Aurora Pacifica, created especially for the occasion by German-born chef Norbert Brandt, who is 29. The State Department is picking up the dinner tab, estimated by food experts at $70 a plate. Other production expenses are being underwritten by San Francisco firms and individuals, according to the White House. The guest list is more than two times the size of a comparable White House dinner.

Singers from the San Francisco Opera and members of the San Francisco Symphony, under the baton of Andrew Meltzer, entertained following dinner.

The following were invited to last night's official dinner given by President and Mrs. Reagan for Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip:

BODY:

The Reagan Administration MX advanced ICBM blue ribbon basing panel headed by retired Air Force Lt. Gen. Brent Scowcroft, former national security adviser to the President, is moving toward a package of compromise recommendations for missile basing. These are: place 50 MXs in Minuteman silos at Francis E. Warren AFB, Cheyenne, Wyo., the deepest Minuteman silos; simultaneously continue detailed theoretical and experimental studies of closely spaced basing with deceptive capsules or accelerate an experimental test program for superhardened capsules for closely spaced basing, and conduct active research and development on the small ICBM (AW&ST May 4, 1981, p. 49). The small ICBM concept originally was proposed by Boeing. The small ballistic missile development, according to an official associated with the group, is not inconsistent with deep underground basing in the early 1970s. The Scowcroft panel is receiving briefings from special counselors who include former Defense secretaries Harold Brown, James Schlesinger, Melvin Laird, Donald Rumsfeld; former secretaries of State Henry Kissinger and Cyrus Vance; former under secretary of Defense for research and engineering William Perry; former CIA chief John McCone; William VanCleve, former Reagan Administration transition team leader in the Pentagon, and retired Army Lt. Gen. Daniel Graham, former head of the Defense Intelligence Agency. Prof. Charles Townes briefed the Scowcroft group last week. Brown resigned from the panel, citing a conflict of interest with his job as a consultant for TRW, Inc.

In a campaign to enlist support for its Central American policy, the administration called in a group of former government policymakers Wednesday to see its evidence of a Soviet and Cuban-backed military buildup in Nicaragua.

The classified State Department briefing was expected to include aerial photographs of Nicaraguan military bases that Central Intelligence Agency and Defense Intelligence Agency officials showed reporters Tuesday in the first of a series of briefings.
